

Tree Warden Role Description

Researcher - Presenter

What is involved?

There are plenty of interesting stories about people, places and trees, some of which are well known but many which are still to be discovered or presented in a new light. Delving into old records or asking local people about their memories can reveal fascinating facts which deserve to be presented so that others can appreciate them. Much of the research effort has to be done individually with volunteers free to choose their own lines of enquiry. The rewards come when finding out something new and sharing the results of research with others, whether it involves a social chat, an audience presentation or some kind of written work.

What's in it for you?

- The opportunity to uncover local history and hear people's memories.
- The opportunity to practise presentation skills.
- The satisfaction of bringing more of the city's heritage to light.
- Becoming part of a friendly, dedicated and passionate team.
- Meeting others with similar interests

Things that Researcher – Presenters do:

- Identifying subjects where there might be a tree-interest angle.
- Visiting websites, libraries and the Record Centre to see what information is already known.
- Asking people who might have personal recollections for their inputs.
- Sharing information with others in the most suitable formats.

This role is voluntary and does not create a legally binding arrangement or employment contract.
